Study in Germany's Capital - MBA and international Master Programmes at Berlin School of Economics and Law

As Europe's most vibrant metropolis, Berlin is a dynamic and inspiring place to live and study. The Berlin School of Economics and Law (BSEL) is not only one of Germany's largest universities of applied sciences, but also a pioneer in launching the MBA degree in Germany. Since 1992, more than 1.600 MBA students have graduated from the BSEL. From our very first MBA courses, we have maintained a reputation for innovation and excellence. Meanwhile, we offer a variety of international Master's programmes, which are all accredited.

Attend our webinar to find out more about BSEL and its postgraduate programmes along with benefits of our courses and career impacts. Particularly, the webinar will provide some insights into our full-time MBA programme and its specializations such as European Management, European-Asian Management and Transatlantic Management as well as about our Master's degree programmes "Chinese-European Economics and Business Studies" and "International Business Management". The latter is going to start a brand new specialization this fall called "Digital Business Management and Leadership". Students can expect to acquire the expertise and skills to work in companies or organisations active in an international environment or take on a management position as a future executive, particularly with a view to digital transformation. Besides, information regarding admission requirements and the application processes will be given.

The postgraduate programmes are designed for applicants with a first degree and at least one year of work experience. The programmes are especially suitable, for example, for graduates in subjects closely related to business administration.
